

the Met is resourceful in terms of accessibility

Part of the Met map, showing accessibility awareness

Entrance from street level the Met wheel chair service

Exhibit accompanied with braille in the egyptian collection

Seeing Through Drawing Exhibition

Braille Catalog

The exhibition includes drawings by the blind and partially sighted that were created through different creative and innovative techniques

Four first weeks of class

Experiencing the Met and learning through the various class panels made me realise that accessibility has a universal meaning. Making the orientation and mobility more efficient can make the art absorbing process more meaningful

We also looked into children's museums which are experienced with large groups visits and museum visits planning.
